ABSTRACT

Background: The goal of Universal Health Coverage (UHC) is ensuring that populations have access to the health services they need without suffering financial hardship in paying for them. This is marred by significant resource shortages and service delivery gaps leading to lack of access to quality health services. In addition to this, poor populations suffer from more challenges like cost, which impedes access to healthcare. Saving for healthcare is an intervention that involves building capacities of individuals, families and communities to take up appropriate self-care, prevention, and care-seeking behavior in order to improve access to much needed healthcare. The Innovative Partnership for Universal Sustainable Healthcare (i-PUSH) program developed by African Medical and Research Foundation (AMREF) and PharmAccess, aims to empower low-income reproductive age women and their families by offering them the opportunity to save for health care on their mobile phones ("health wallet"), have subsidized health insurance, access upgraded quality healthcare, and improve their knowledge through digitally trained Community Health Volunteers (CHVs).

Objectives: To provide under-the-skin insights into the target populations in Kakamega, Kisumu and Nairobi; to evaluate the impact of i-PUSH program on maternal healthcare utilization, financial protection and women's empowerment; and to evaluate the impact of the LEAP training tool on CHVs and women's health literacy including their knowledge, behavior and uptake of respective services.

Study design: The study will use a three-pronged approach: year-long weekly Financial and Health Diaries, Baseline and Endline surveys, and qualitative interviews. The Diaries and the Surveys will be carried out in two Counties, Kakamega and Kisumu. The qualitative interviews will be carried out in the two counties and Nairobi as an additional county. The study will use a cluster randomized control trial design in Kakamega to evaluate the impact of i-PUSH program. In Kisumu, selected households will be followed-up to capture the health-seeking behavior, health insurance, and health expenditure pattern of households over time. The study will be initially for 17 months and will continue for three years subject to additional funding.

Sampling Strategy

Quantitative study

With regards to sample size, we followed Hemming et al. [61]'s study for sample size calculation by fixing the number of clusters per arm to be 12 clusters, and then estimate the cluster size and total sample size as well. In the current study, we assume that the current i-PUSH program could yield an effect size of 0.4 in terms of healthcare utilization with an intracluster correlation (ICC) of  $\rho=0.014$ . The estimates of the ICC was derived from Geng et al. [62]'s study conducted in Nandi County where they used high-frequency data on diaries on health-seeking behaviors and financial expenditures over one year (October 2012-October 2013). The calculation of the ICC is based on healthcare utilization measured as visits to any formal health provider, regardless of any reported health symptoms. We also hypothesize a confidence interval of 95%, a margin-of-error of 5% and a power of 80%. The cluster size per arm, total women per clusters is therefore 10 and 12 women, respectively. Appendix 2 gives the details for sample size estimates.

Furthermore, for Kisumu, since we did not conduct any impact evaluation in that County, sample size estimates of 100 women was based on previous studies which used at least 100 participants for financial and health diaries data [62], [63]. We randomized at the level of the community units (CUs), proceeding as follows.

In Kakamega, we aligned RCT design with the i-PUSH expansion strategy in Kakamega. There are currently two options that were decided by AMREF and PharmAccess.

1) The i-PUSH program will expand to several new sub-counties; or 2) The i-PUSH program will expand to new Community Units within the existing four sub-counties where the program is currently implemented.

In either case, the treatment group consisted of randomly selected Community Units (CUs) in the catchment area of the clinics selected purposively by the program. Each treatment CU is served by a number of Community Health Workers (CHVs) who are trained on the i-PUSH program.

The control group consisted of CUs where the CHVs were not be trained by i-PUSH. We randomized at the level of the CU because within CUs, CHVs received the same training (hence cannot be assigned to treatment or control).

Option 1) In the new sub-counties: Out of a longlist of about 90 eligible CUs, approximately 80 CUs received training for the program. We randomly selected 10 CUs to be in the study control group (that were not be included) and 10 CUs in the study treatment group (after matching pairs of CUs); the remaining 70 CUs were included in the program but not in the study sample. Within CUs, we randomly selected 12 households for the dairies.

Option 2) In the existing sub-counties: Out of a list of at least 20 eligible CUs where i-Push has not been rolled out yet, the research team randomly selected 10 CUs to be in the study control group and 10 CUs to be in the study treatment group (after matching pairs of CUs); the remaining CUs in the existing sub-counties were included in the program but were not in the study sample.

Supervision

Trained field supervisors were situated in the field (Kakamega and Kisumu) to supervise real time data collection. During fieldwork, data quality for quantitative data was ensured by APHRC team leads through regular spot checks and sit-ins to approximately 5-10% of each field worker's daily work to verify authenticity of data collected.

The field supervisors certified the quality of the data through editing of the data before they were transferred to the database.

Data collection was done electronically using tablets/phones, with spot checks for quality control. Once the data collection was completed, all inconsistencies were resolved prior to data analysis.

An automated routine to check on the data completeness, correctness and consistency was also be run on 100% of the collected data. A discrepancy report was then generated that helped in following up on any inconsistencies or errors in the data with the responsible interviewer.
