Overview

ABSTRACT

The Genomic and environmental risk factors for cardiometabolic disease in Africans (AWI-Gen) project was a collaborative study between the University of the Witwatersrand (Wits) and the INDEPTH Network funded under the Human Heredity and Health in Africa (H3Africa) initiative. The H3Africa was a ground-breaking initiative to build institutional and individual capacity to undertake genetic and genomic studies in the African region. This collaboration, involved five INDEPTH sites i.e. 1) Navrongo - Ghana; 2) Nanoro - Burkina Faso; 3&4) Agincourt and Digkale - South Africa; and 5) Nairobi - Kenya) plus the Soweto-based birth-to-twenty cohort. AWI-Gen phase I was a population based cross-sectional study with a research platform of over 12,045 participants aged 40-60 years from Burkina Faso, Ghana, Kenya and South Africa. It aimed to understand the interplay between genetic, epigenetic and environmental risk factors for obesity and related cardiometabolic diseases (CMD) in sub-Saharan Africa and it generated epi-demographic, environmental, health history, behavioral, anthropometric, physiological and genetic data across a range of rapidly transitioning African settings. This provided a unique resource to examine genetic associations and gene-environment interactions that will contribute to Afrocentric risk prediction models and African-appropriate Mendelian Randomization instruments, and exploit their potential to improve personal and population health - while strengthening regional research capacity. We plan to continue this work in AWIGEN-phase II among the same participants recruited in AWIGen-I offering an opportunity to examine data in a longitudinal manner.

The AWI-Gen phase II project aims to establish the genomic contribution to CMD and risk at a time when multiple interacting transitions, in the presence of high background HIV or malaria prevalence, are driving a rapid escalation in CMD across the African continent. The project capitalizes on the unique strengths of existing longitudinal cohorts and well-established health and demographic surveillance systems (HDSS) run by the partner institutions. The six study sites represent geographic and social variability of African populations which are also at different stages of the demographic and epidemiological transitions. The work in Kenya will be undertaken in the Nairobi Urban Health and Demographic Surveillance System (NUHDSS) run by African Population and Health Research Center (APHRC) following participants who were recruited in AWIGEN-Phase I.

AWI-Gen II consisted of five main aims: i) AIM-1 (Sub-study 1): Genetic associations studies to elucidate functional pathways involved in determining body composition and risk for CMD by detecting pivotal genomic and environmental contributors; ii) AIM 2 (Sub-study 2): Genomics and bioinformatics-impact of genomic diversity on disease risk and precision public health; iii) AIM 3 (Sub-study 3): Examine changes over the menopausal transition in body composition and CMD risk; iv) AIM 4 (Sub-study 4): Examine gut microbiome in older adults and its relationship to obesity, diabetes and glucose tolerance and ageing; and v) AIM 5 (Sub-study 5): Explore respiratory disease in context of multi-morbidity.

In this application, we sought ethical approval for the Kenya study only. The other partners sought approval from their appropriate ethics review authorities in their countries. The study budget was $248,613 and was funded by National Institute of Health (NIH)-USA under H3Africa. Data collection was undertaken for approximately 12 months but sample processing, data analysis, manuscript writing, capacity building and policy engagement was continued up to three years after field work (up to 2022).

Scope

NOTES

INDIVIDUAL: age, gender, BMI, Visceral fat levels, T2 diabetes status, blood pressure, socio-economic status, lifestyle (diet, tobacco, alcohol, exercise etc.) and HIV infection status. In addition, for participants in microbiome study were asked information on antibiotics use. There was repeated anthropometric measurements including height, weight, waist and hip circumference and ultrasound measurements of visceral and subcutaneous fat, and cIMT.

Sampling

Sampling Procedure

a) Study design: A prospective cohort study to examine genetic associations and gene-environment interactions with measures of change in CMD and risk derived over 5 years (AWI-Gen I survey was in 2014/2015, and survey for phenotypic characteristics (under AWI-Gen II) among the same individuals will be repeated in 2019/2020). This was an extend baseline (AWI-Gen I) to provide longitudinal data (AWI-Gen II).

b) Study site (geographical)

The study in Kenya was conducted in Nairobi, specifically in Korogocho and Viwandani urban informal settlements which are covered by the NUHDSS.

c) Study populations

Sub-study 1 & 5: Adult (40-60 years at baseline) residents of Korogocho and Viwandani informal settlements registered in the NUHDSS.

Sample size

A sample size of 2000 per site (12000 in total) was used in AWIGEN-I based on power calculations and effect sizes. The power calculations show that we have power to detect realistic effect sizes, based on studies in other populations. Figure 2 illustrates the relationship between power and effect size for two different phenotypes, illustrating that the detectable effect size is realistic.

Power analysis for a sample size of 12000 individuals based on proposed candidate gene study for BMI (shown on the left) and for DXA (total body fat) (shown on the right). Given a sample size of 12000 in the AWI-Gen study, this graph shows effect size (x) which could be detected at a given power (y) for different minor allele frequencies (ranging from 0.05-0.45).

For example, with a minor allele frequency of 0.25, we will have 80% power to detect an effect size (Beta) of 0.20 per allele change in BMI, and an effect size of 0.25 per allele change in body fat percentage.

For AWIGEN 2, we will follow the same participants. We anticipate a retention of 70% from the 2000 participants recruited in phase 1. Thus, our sample size for AWIGEN-11 was approximately 1400 participants for the Kenyan site to for sub-studies 1 and 2.

For Sub-studies 3 & 4 we will randomly sample 250 individuals for each sub-study which is a large sample by most microbiome project standards.

For Sub-study 5 we will include all participants selected in Sub-study 1

Questionnaires

Overview

The questionnaire for AWIGen 2 was a structured questionnaire developed by the University of Witwatersrand. The questionnaire was translated from English to Swahili. The individual questionnaire was administered to an adult (40-60 years old), which collected various information of the individual including, age, gender, BMI, Visceral fat levels, T2 diabetes status, blood pressure, socio-economic status, lifestyle (diet, tobacco, alcohol, exercise etc.) and HIV infection status. In addition, for participants in microbiome study we will ask information on antibiotics use. We will repeat the anthropometric measurements including height, weight, waist and hip circumference and ultrasound measurements of visceral and subcutaneous fat, and cIMT.
