ABSTRACT

Abstract

Background

Sparse evidence is available to support improved programming and reporting on SRHR in refugee settings in the East and Horn of Africa, where unsafe abortion is one of the major causes of maternal mortality and morbidity. It is important to design studies that explicitly investigate the sexual and reproductive health needs and outcomes of refugee populations, as it is likely that these factors differ among refugee populations as compared to the general population. Understanding the state of abortion in a given context, including abortion incidence, safety, and outcomes, is challenging due to the limitations of currently available methodologies.

Objectives: To determine the incidence of induced abortions and the severity of abortion-related complications in refugee settings in Ethiopia.

Methods: The study employed a quantitative cross-sectional design. The study components included three separate surveys. Although the study was not nationally representative, efforts were made to ensure representativeness at the refugee settlement/camp level : i) representative Health Facility Survey (HFS) to estimate the number of women who receive post-abortion care (PAC) following abortion complications, ii) a Knowledgeable Informants Survey (KIS) to capture information on the proportion of all women having abortions who receive facility-based treatment for abortion-related complications, and iv) a Prospective Morbidity Survey (PMS) to capture information necessary to describe characteristics of women receiving treatment for abortion complications, the severity of complications, the type of treatment received, and the delays in access to PAC. The PMS also included clinical data abstraction from the medical records.

Potential Impact: This will help host governments, humanitarian partners, and donors to seek long-term, innovative, cost-effective SRHR development solutions to bring about change in the health and lives of refugee women and girls.

UNITS OF ANALYSIS

Abortion Incidence, Severity of Complications, and Health Facilities' Capacity to offer Post Abortion Care for people living in refugee settings in Ethiopia.

Individual - PAC patients, Knowledgeable Informants

Institutional (Health Facility) - PAC is providers

Scope

NOTES

Health Facility Survey (HFS) : Patient's Medical Assessment, Laboratory Findings, Assessment of Complication Severity, Management and Outcomes of abortion complications

Knowledgeable Informants Survey (KIS) : Background of the respondent, general question, induced abortion, answer certainty, miscarriage treatment and stigma questions related to abortion complications

Prospective Morbidity Survey (PMS) :

a)PMS_Patient-provider survey:

basic information, Reproductive health history, Symptoms and care-seeking decisions, Quality of abortion and family planning services, Abortion knowledge and attitudes, security, conflict and violence, Pms provider section, general information on patient intake, Initial examination and observations, complication questions, procedures and medications, likely abortion questions and final outcome of the treatment

b) PMS_PMS_MRR:

Patient's Medical Assessment, Laboratory Findings, Assessment of Complication Severity, Management and Outcomes of abortion complication

Coverage

GEOGRAPHIC COVERAGE

Refugee settings in Ethiopia

UNIVERSE

The study targeted women aged 15-49, living in refugee settings in Ethiopia with the following tools: a Health Facility Survey (HFS) targeting health facilities in the refugee setting concerned and the surrounding, a Knowledgeable Informants Survey (KIS) collected information on the proportion of all women having abortions who receive facility-based treatment for abortion-related complications, and a Prospective Morbidity Survey (PMS) captured information to describe characteristics of women receiving treatment for abortion complications, the severity of complications, the type of treatment received, and the delays in access to PAC. The PMS also included clinical data abstraction from the medical records.

Sampling

Sampling Procedure

Sampling took place at different levels of the study since it had different components:

Health Facility Survey

Our sampling universe for the HFS included all facilities that theoretically offer post-abortion care (PAC) services to refugee women. In Ethiopia, the facility levels are hospitals (public and private), health centers, and higher level/NGO private clinics. Our sampling universe included all facilities located within the geographical boundaries of each camp. However, in some instances women chose to seek care outside of the camp boundaries, either because those facilities are more geographically convenient to access or because women wanted greater privacy when seeking postabortion care. As such, we worked with key informants to identify additional facilities outside of the camp boundaries that served refugee women.

Within selected facilities, respondents are the most qualified to answer questions about PAC caseloads and the types of cases seen at the facility. Depending on the facility they were senior administrators, heads of the OBGYN ward, or heads of private clinics, including medical doctors, nurses and midwives.

Knowledgeable Informant Survey

The study population of the KIS was professionals who were knowledgeable about the conditions of abortion and the provision of post-abortion care among refugee women in Ethiopia. These included medical doctors, registered nurses and midwives in public and private practice, policymakers, advocates, researchers, NGO staff, community health workers, and community leaders. Interviews were carried out at the respondents' place of work or setting of the respondents' choice.

A purposive list of potential respondents working in refugee settings in Ethiopia was drawn up by the research team, and the final selection was reviewed and approved by the study team. Respondents who were invited to participate but said they were not familiar enough with this subject to inform the study, or refused to grant an interview, were excluded.

Prospective Morbidity Survey

We selected a subset of health facilities that were sampled for the HFS to be included in PMS. Once our sample of PMS facilities was selected, we attempted to survey all women who received PAC at that facility over a 28-day period. In addition, the data collectors accessed the medical charts of the PAC patients to extract data related to reported diagnosis, laboratory measurements and management procedures undertaken.

While this study is focused on refugee women, we did not restrict participation to only refugee women seeking care. Instead, we assessed whether a patient was a member of the host community or a refugee. This allowed our study to compare severity outcomes based on refugee status. In addition, this provided additional information on the distribution of patients served within our sample of health facilities.

In accordance with previous AICM studies, we also identified one staff member at each sampled health facility to keep a real-time tally of the number of women who sought PAC over the 28-day period. This allowed the study team to adjust for non-response to the PMS survey, and this data also provided an important validation of the PAC caseload estimates that we generated from the HFS.

Deviations from Sample Design

HFS: Facilities in two of the 24 refugee camps in Ethiopia were excluded from the survey: one camp in Amhara region due to security challenges, and one camp in Afar region which had closed.

PMS: The PMS sampling frame was drawn from the HFS sample and was informed by PAC provision, caseloads, and the proportion of refugees served. From the HFS facilities, the PMS sampling plan was to include:

- All hospitals and MCH clinics;
- All facilities that participated in the HFS and served at least 10 PAC patients per month; and All facilities located within refugee camps that provided PAC.
- Facilities located outside of refugee camps that provided PAC were included at the discretion of study partners in Ethiopia.

This was to exclude Facilities that had low caseload of PAC patients ,which were located outside of refugee camps and served less than 6% of refugees were excluded. We deviated from this original plan mainly on the point of excluding facilities with a low caseload of PAC patients that were outside of the camp, as some of these facilities were included. These decisions were made at the discretion of study partners in Ethiopia.

Response Rate

PMS: Of the 66 facilities sampled for participation in the PMS, a total of 47 participated (response rate: 71.2%). Regarding the individual-level response rate, all patients treated at the sampled facilities during the study period were eligible to participate in the study. The participation rate of patients was 84.2% overall, 76.8% at health centers, 100% at private clinics, and 84.4% at hospitals.

Weighting

PMS : The variable named, wgt_pmsind, was used as the weighting coefficient. This weight was a product of two calculations:

- stage 1 was the total number of PAC patients presenting at sampled facilities during PMS fielding divided by the number of patients that participated in the PMS. This was meant to account for individual-level response rates.
- stage2 was another division meant to account for the total universe of PAC cases (including PAC cases served at facilities not sampled in the PMS). The numerator was the total number of PAC patients estimated to be treated by facility level, which was calculated using questions from the HFS on PAC patients seen during the past month and an average month at each facility. The denominator was the total number of PAC patients presenting at sample facilities during PMS fielding by facility level.

Questionnaires

Overview

The study used four questionnaires during data collection at different data points with different target population. The questionnaires were in English. The HFS questionnaire captured information to estimate the number of women receiving treatment in facilities for complications from unsafe abortions, the KIS questionnaire was used to collect information on the proportion of all refugee women having abortions who received facility-based treatment for abortion-related complications and the PMS captured information to describe characteristics of women living in refugee settings and receiving treatment for abortion complications, the type of treatment received for complications, uptake of post-abortion family planning, and the delays in access to post-abortion care. The PMS also included charts review to abstract data on laboratory measurements, procedures and management of complications for PAC patients.

Supervision

The Baobab team and the Guttmacher team coordinated and supervised the KIS/HFS and PMS. One co-principal investigator and a co-investigator, based in Ethiopia, closely monitored the daily data collection activities. Meanwhile, the central team provided overall leadership and coordination. A total of 11 data collectors and one coordinator participated in KIS/HFS data collection across five regions: Gambella, Asosa, Semara, Jigjiga, and Melakdida. For the PMS, 49 data collectors and six coordinators were involved. These interviewers worked closely with their supervisors, the study coordinators, Baobab RPC and Population Council Inc. technical staff, and other project partners.

Data Processing

Data Editing

Interviews for all surveys was conducted face-to-face, using Open Data Kit (ODK) software on Android smartphones. Completed ODK forms were submitted to a secure cloud server using Wi-Fi or mobile data networks accessible only to the study team. The data was later uploaded to Stata to be cleaned and analyzed.
